They are holding frequent meetings and are moving slowly and carefully, hoping by their caution to form an association that shall serve their purpose.

In a few days representatives of the association will visit the different oil towns and organize auxiliary lodges to strengthen the main body. Since the permanent organization was effected recently the association has been working in secret. It is said by members of the executive committee that it is only a question of a short time until an independent refinery is constructed in Montgomery county, probably in Independence. A refinery will require pipe lines.

This means competition for the Standard. The Standard does not want competition. It has spent millions of dollars n building refineries, pipe lines and storage stations in Kansas, and it is trying to prevent a consummation of the plans of the Western Oil Producers' Association.

Things are so different in Kansas from what they are anywhere else that the Standard is guessing what move to make. The Standard has been sitting at the same game for more than a quarter of a cenury, and knows every play on the board, but it doesn't know this new player, or his tricks, or his nerve, or his limit. And so the Standard player studies, and alternates his smiles with frowns.

Various agents of the Standard have visited the Kansas oil fields and moved around among the oil men and felt their pulse, and they have gone away convinced that Kansas is a great oil field, and more mystified than ever as to just which way the producer is going to jump next. "You see," said one of the Standard this field who do not know us or our methods. They have been told wild stories concerning the Standard, and they think we are going to rob them of their properties. Now, if we had only the old-time producer to deal with, we would have no trouble at all. You cannot tell what these fellows There's the rub. There are hundreds of shrewd business men dabbling in oil in Kansas who have temporarily left a law office or a mill or some other line o trade or some profession that requires business acumen, for a vacation as it were. They have made large investments in oil property, which they are afraid of losing through the manipulations of the Standard, and they are standing at attention ready at a moment's notice for a scrimmage.

Thus when the recent meeting was held at Independence to discuss the fifteen-cent cut in the price of oil, 100 producers came down from Chanute on a special train. They had no intention of accepting the cut and they discussed means of restoring the price.

And so it is not surprising that the Standard has inaugurated a campaign of education in Kansas by contracting for advertising space in the leading newspapers in which reading matter, historic, ex-planatory and favorable to the Standard s to be printed.

It is a strange fact, though, that while the producer fee is that the Standard is tricky and will resort to questionable eans and unsavory methods, he still ard has run his oil for years, and he has always found it honest in the management

The Standard is the producer's banker, and there is no banking institution in the country which is more implicitly trusted. The Standard sends its agent to the producer's well, gauges the oil, turns it into the pipe line, comes back and gauges the tank again after the oil is run, issues a pipe line statement of the amount of oil run, and forty hours later the Standard buys it at the market price and the money is ready at the Standard's office on demand

If a man is about to sell his property he gives the prospective purchaser an order on the Standard and the pipe line department furnishes a statement of the runs of oil from the wells as far back as desired No one questions the accuracy of the stateent. The purchaser is perfectly satisfied with the evidence thus produced.

So far there has never been a serious controversy between the Standard and any producer over the running of oil. On one or two occasions producers have been known to werst the trust by turning the oil back into the tanks after it was supposed to have gone into the Standard's line.

The Standard's purchasing agent in Kansas is the Prairie Oil and Gas Company. The regulations of this agency differ from those of Eastern agents, and generally in favor of the producer.

The moment the oil is taken into the pipe line it belongs to the Standard, though the producer may not elect to sell it for sixty days. In the East when a producer allowed oil to stand in the Standard's lines he was charged storage; if lightning struck influential producers who think, for various ressons, that it should be a common carrier and it is more than probable the Legislature next winter will be asked to declare it one.

When a company discovers oil the Standard, through its agents, lays a pipe line to the well and takes the oil, not until, how-ever, the company makes the following application: To the Prairie Oil and Gas Co:

application:

To the Prairie Oil and Gas Co:

The undersigned certify and guarantee that they are the legal owners of — wells, Nos. — and — upon the — farm, township, — county, State of Kansas including the royalty interest, and until further notice you will give credit for all oil received from said wells as per directions below:

Then follows a list of the persons to whom payment is to be made for the oil. If there are four partners, for instance, each receives an individual check for his share. The Standard acts as a go-between, thus preventing any difficulty among partners. The owner of the land goes to the Standard's office and draws pay for his royalty.

Recently, when the price of oil dropped seven cents, a producer who had run his oil the day previous called at the office and demanded payment according to the market price of the day before. He could not be made to understand that, while the oil becomes the Standard's the moment it is run into the line, it is really not sold until the producer gives notice at the office of his purpose to cash it in.

If he wishes to, he may leave it in the line sixty days before cashing it, and receive the then market price, which may be considerably advanced over what it was when the oil was run. The rule works both ways. If the price of oil goes up, he wins; if it goes down, he loses.

If it is not cashed at the end of sixty the Kansas producers as a result of this rule.

Last winter the price of Kansas oil advanced until it reached $1.36 a barrel. With this price for oil there was an immense amount of development work, so that the production, which for the year 1903 was 1,128,592 barrels, had in the first seven months of 1904 increased to over 2,500,000 barrels, and the Standard was buying and atoring 12,000 barrels a day more than it had any immediate use for.

The price began to go down, first three cents at a time, then five cents, and at last it dropped fifteen cents in one week.

The producers were amazed. Then they were angry. Within twenty-four hours after the last cut they were holding indignation meetings and planning a campaign of opposition.

after the last cut they were holding indignation meetings and planning a campaign of opposition.

In all of its experience the Standard had never seen such a storm stirred up among the producers in so short a time. It was surprised and dazed. The decline suddenly ceased. Rumors became current that the price would not go any lower.

Old-timers, who had never known the Standard to take water, laughed. The Standard sent its agents into the field to take the pulse of the producer. They found a lot of men who seemed more than ready for a fight, if necessary to protect their rights. They got snatches of sentences, which, when put together, sounded like a big scheme, which, any way it could be looked at, meant competition.

On Sept. 1 the price of oil went up two cents a barrel, and the independent producers claimed a victory which to them was no less important than the taking of Port Arthur to the Japs. The independents deny that the increase in the market will lessen their efforts to carry their plans into execution. While no information is being given out, it is understood the producers' association has on foot one of the largest independent movements ever undertaken in any oil field.

. 8.071,090 The Standard now has over $,000,000 barrels of oil in storage in Kansas. The daily production is about 17,000 barrels. It has provision now, or will have when the Kansas City refinery is completed, to use 7,000 barrels a day. The rest must be storad.

An increase in the price of oil under such conditions has scarcely ever been known before. At the present rate the total production for 1904 will reach over 5,000,000 barrels.
Four hundred wells are being drilled every month, with prospects of a large increase this winter.

MAY BE NEW PACIFIC PORT. Mexican Concession for a New Railroad Line to California.

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 9.-A new Pacific port will be opened to the traffic of Mexico and the United States if the Southern has firm confidence in it. Thus the Stand- Pacific decides to avail itself of a concession recently granted by the Mexican Government. One of the clauses of the the right to build a line from one point on the northern boundary to another point on the same boundary provides that the company may extend the line southwest through that territory to the port of Ensenada de Todos territory to the port of Ensenada de Todos Santos.

The first object of the Southern Pacific in obtaining the concession was to make possible a new route to California. The track that will be built through the northern portion of Lower California will be but a section of a much longer piece of Southern Pacific property. Surveys for this work are already in progress and the construction will be begun soon. The extension of the line to Port Ensenada de Todos Santos, which is about 100 miles south of the border. which is about 100 miles south of the border, will not be commenced until the other work is completed.

According to the terms of the concession, the company must notify the Government within three years whether it intends to build the branch to the coast. After the company has notified the Government of its intention to build the branch, construction must be done at the rate of fourteen kilometres a year and the entire line must be completed within six years from the date of notification.

THE "SEEING NEW YORK" ARREST Cab Drivers Pleased, but Say It's the Work of a Rival Company.

The cabmen, and especially the drivers of hansoms, are delighted with the trouble that has come to the "Seeing New York" automobiles. One of them said last night that since the automobiles began their trips up Fifth avenue there had been a marked falling off in the call for hansoms he was charged storage; if lightning struck a tank of oil or a pipe line burst, the loss was prorated among the producers. It is not so in Kansas. The Standard is the loser.

One reason for this is that the Prairie Oil and Gas Company is not a common carrier; it is a producing company with a pipe line department. There are some marked falling off in the call for hansoms to take out of town visitors along the avenue and through the Park.

"It used to be good graft," said the driver of the hansom; "for the out of town fares used to want us to point out the places where the swell guys lived and tell them all about it. We used to get good tips besides the regular price of the ride, but these new rubberneck wagons killed the graft."

The cabby remarked falling off in the call for hansoms to take out of town visitors along the avenue and through the Park.

The cabby remarked that it was odd that only the automobiles which start from the Flatiron Building have been molested. It was rumored among the cabbles, he said, that the trouble had been started by a rival sight seeing company. He said William S. Devery was behind that company with a claim to an old franchise, in virtue of which he henced to kill compaction. he hoped to kill competition

ART IN PLASTER.

New York Supplies Most of the Copies of Famous Busts and Statues. New York supplies a large part of the country with plaster casts of statuary, ancient and modern, reliefs high and low and copies of ornament work of the kind in endless variety. One house has been engaged in the business for nearly fifty years, and the number of such houses has vastly multiplied within the last twenty Tons of plaster of paris worked up into such ornamental forms are shipped from here across the continent, southward to the extremity of the Florida peninsula, and northward as far as the farthest limits of Maine, and even into the British possessions.

The best houses still find a steady demand for the classic and the antique. Drawing and modelling are now so widely taught in all sorts of schools that famous subjects from classic periods are used in great and increasing numbers. Local museums, provincial artists, libraries and private persons buy copies of the antique. The South especially is waking up to the

The South especially is waking up to the importance of the plastic art, and many of the best known works of Grecian sculpture are bought by institutions and private persons south of Mason and Dixon's line. But almost everywhere, outside a few great cities, there is a prejudice against the nude in the plastic art and a demand for draped figures.

One conspicuous maker of plaster copies from the Greek says that the most popular pieces are the Venus of Milo and the Winged Victory of Samothrace The popularity of the latter is of more recent growth. The manufacturer declares that if he possessed a copyright upon those two works he could make a fortune in six months. They sell in all sizes and are used in all sorts of places, from modest private parlors to spacious public halls. Hermes, in various poses, is also much in demand, and the figures from the frieze of the Parthenon are used for a great variety of purposes.

Most popular of the plastic artists of the Italian Renaissance is Donatello. Copies of his works are constantly ordered from all parts of the United States. Benvenuto Cellini is a popular artist of the later renaissance. His shields, decorated in relief, are much used for indoor decoration, and parts of his famous group in Florence, Perseus With the Head of Medusa, are cast and recast in response to a steady demand. Of more modern works the head of the First Napoleon was once vastly popular, but is now comparatively seldom called

Of more modern works the head of the First Napoleon was once vastly popular, but is now comparatively seldom called for. Washington's figure has been so multiplied by many cast houses that none finds a great demand for him. Busts of Goethe, Dante, Shakespeare and a few other great men of letters are steadily sold, but not in large quantities by any one house.

sold, but not in large quantities by any one house.

Since the present rage for plaster casts reached its height a few years ago the use of such articles for presents has greatly increased. A few works of the Renaissance are specially popular for wedding, Christmas and birthday presents. The demand for such things is especially great just before the Christmas holidays. The manufacturers are busy all summer making ready to meet this special demand.
